

Lillian Barros is an assistant researcher at the Centro de Investigação de Montanha (CIMO), Instituto Politécnico de Bragança and vice-coordinator of CIMO. She obtained her PhD in Pharmacy (Nutrition and Bromatology) at the University of Salamanca (2008). She has published more than 573 indexed papers in the Food Science and Technology area (65 h-index), edited 4 books, written several book chapters, registered 13 patents and is principal investigator of several national and international research projects. She has also supervised several post-doc, PhD and master students, has served as an international expert evaluator for several project programs, has been member of organizing committees of scientific conferences, presented several invited lectures, and has more than 900 oral/poster communications. She has reached top positions in the world rankings, such as Highly Cited Researcher Clarivate, since 2016. Her research targets are mainly in the identification, separation, and recovery of functional molecules from different natural products.